I too have plenty of anecdotal evidence of catching some fish multiple times. And while they may not always be the largest, they typically have some sort of distinguishing feature, which is why the photo was taken and proof exists.

I think the answers are likely to vary wildly. Not just on size, which stream it came from, etc., but also what exact section of that stream, the fertility of said stream, the individual preferences of that individual trout, etc. I certainly wouldn't be surprised to find that many trout get caught upwards of 10 times. I also would expect that many, even fair sized ones, never get caught. And everything in between.
