I would only carry bear spray in grizzly country [obviously not much of a concern in PA] or if I fished in areas where bears had grown accustomed to humans (and our food and garbage). The other type of encounter that is somewhat probable is getting between a sow and her cubs and that's a position I ever care to be in. All bears I've ever encountered in the remote woods have turn tail and run away. They should be respected but need not be feared. It's much more dangerous to drive to a remote location to fish then it is to encounter a bear. I fear the two legged creatures behind the wheel more than our resident black bears.
