I am a bit worried about the comment from another thread which stated that even though the water temperatures are cooler in the morning the dissolved oxygen levels are often actual at their lowest. This was the first time that I had ever heard that particular theory or fact.

I am thinking about making this a family camping trip instead of a men's fishing trip. I am considering to call the DCNR and see if I can transfer my reservation from Poe Paddy (next to Penns, no showers) to Poe Valley (next to swimming lake, w/showers). Then maybe I could do some limited fishing and also swimming, biking, and playing with the kids.

I know that this is often sacred territory, but if anyone would like to PM me with some of the prime brookie streams I would appreciate your insights. I have a pretty good idea of the best couple, but I always spend 99% of my time on the bigger water of Penns.
