You develop a knack for casting into the dark. And - as kray pointed out - fishing by sound, instead of sight. Any splash in the area where you think your fly is, you lift the rod. Many times, you have nothing. But then, every so often - you're rewarded with a fish on.

It also is a good idea to know the spot you're in quite well - so you don't stumble into a large boulder, or off of a ledge into deep water
