Blueheron is right. Sure air temps are hot, but the reservoir still has a considerable amount of <68 water to discharge. If we can get some rains into the tribs we should be able to sustain the season a bit longer. Find a pool and hit it in the eve. I'm sure there will be fish rising in this wade friendly water.

FYI - I'd look for releases to start matching inflow tomorrow. Which may equate to a bump in release to approx 300cfs. This is still more than wade-able throughout. And even floatable on the lower river. Best of both worlds!
