I used to fish the DHALO all the time but not so much the last few years. Summer time fishing was usually really good with a foam beetle against the banks. Also smaller cdc caddis would work well. Although the stream banks haven't changed all that much it doesn't seem to be as deep as it used to be in certain areas. There used to always be several rising fish upstream of the foot bridge that could torment you all morning by refusing your offering. About 50 yards up from there was another good spot where there were always some risers. That stretch changed. I don't think the big storm a few years ago was very kind to the stream (or the people who used to live in the house at the upper end of the DHALO) One thing it never lacked was cool water.
