You bring up a good point about risers. That's something Nick and I saw nothing of the other day. I mean nothing. I worked an ECH and foam beetle pattern just to prospect and nadda. Zip. That 68 degree temp I took was only a foot down, so I'm comfortable saying the stream was relatively cold throughout.

I attempted to take a pic of the brookie, but before I could get my camera out, he hopped off my hand. Hard to hold onto such a small little guy and not suffocate him. He was hooked a few hundred yards downstream of the footbridge. In the area where a small footbridge crosses what appears to be a feeder stream (that was relatively dry).
