Was really looking forward to marginal streams holding these stocked browns and rainbows over a little longer. Pa summers are so frustrating for the trout addicted!

A few hot days here and there will not kill them all off like flipping a light switch. You should be able to still find a decent number of stockies in the ATW's after this heat wave if they were there before.

I wouldn't expect much mortality until we get a heat wave that last a couple weeks or so. Again, it's not like someone flips a switch and the trout all die. It takes a while before the affects of hot weather take their toll. Even after an extended heat wave a surprising number of fish can make it depending on other factors such as stream flow.
