

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Early mornings

Re: Early mornings

Author: : afishinado

Date: : 2013/7/7 8:02:55

URL:

Quote:

Fishidiot wrote:

Quote:

AndyP wrote:

This rarely pays off unless the water is a little dirty but I cant help myself. Thats the formula right ?
Sorta dark, early morning...throw big meat. .

Yeah, it is indeed sort of a formula - at least intuitively.

And it can be productive as Salmonoid has pointed out. However, speaking for myself, I tend to find that trout streams that get low and warm in the summer (most of our streams here in PA obviously) often don't fish well with streamers this time of year. Now, the limestoners are a different story - ditto with bass fishing. However, for conventional streams with summer flows and temps in the mid to upper 60s, I find they're best fished with skinny terrestrials.....even under low light conditions.

Agree with FI. The only streams and rivers that offer decent trout fishing in this weather are tailwaters, spring / limestone streams and the headwaters of native/wild streams in forested areas, if you care to hike in with this heat.

No shame in fishing for bass or panfish this time of year....in fact, it's a shame if you don't!