I was at Cleona park, not the DHALO area.

Friday I was there again. I think I caught the same trout again ;)

There were some kids bait fishing, and I saw one other guy with spinning gear on my way out, but he was done for the day. Earlier in the day I had seen another car in the lot, but I guess they went upstream. I was headed down stream.

Water temp was 72F between the bridge and the reported spring, and 70F after the spring (just got a thermometer earlier that day). I should clarify that I have been told there is a spring feeding the pool where the big tree out in the water is.

I accidently waded past the posted area downstream because you can't see the sign from in the creek. The brush is very overgrown in front of it. There are some deep holes back there. I saw the back of the sign on the way out so I won't be going that far again.

There are several holesbetween the bridge and the posted area holding trout. Convincing them to bite is another issue.
