dryflyguy & bikerfish- As we were walking back down I was kinda wondering if you guys were on the site or not. Well, nice to unofficially meet you! I've fished behind others who high-holed me on small streams before and know what it feels like, so I figured I'd ask which way you guys were fishing. Wouldn't want it to happen to me. I usually only fish that stream maybe 3 times a year at the most but that's only the second time I've seen other fishermen there. The first time I saw a person fishing way up by the upper parking lot. Not counting the extreme upper stretch, I do still see a good amount of footprints every time I've been there and I'd imagine a lot are from fishermen. It does sadly get pounded, but I can see why for the reasons greenghost mentioned. I've always wanted to check out that other nearby stream, but I've heard it has an appropriate name.

ryguyfi- Yep. I never did all that good when it's at an average-low flow, but whenever it's high and muddy it's better And that's when the big ones come out to play. The second small stream I fished also gets a boatload of pressure and the fish there are super spooky and picky whenever it's low and clear. Bass, trout, everything. The bass are usually pickier than the trout. But whenever it's up it can come to life.
