Someone just ruined the favorite trout fishing of a lot of anglers around here.

That's a bit over the top. I've fished several of the didymo infested streams (Upper Delaware, South Holston, etc.), and while the stuff is a pain those rivers still have some of the best trout fishing anywhere.

Also, I believe a recent study found that didymo is present in a substantial number of watersheds that don't have major blooms like the tailwaters do. Just because it is there doesn't mean its going to take over the river.

Pine is a favorite of mine and I have some property up there, so this does have some personal stake for me. I don't think it's time to panic just yet.
