Mountainbrookie: I am in complete sympathy with your thoughts on the stories in this book. Loses' account of one of his annual week-long visits to Johnny's camp is priceless. His description of the rise and fall of the tributary below the cabin window sticks in my mind, and the tale of the hog and rattlesnake reveals the author's love of the rustic life. I can't get enough of this subject.

Another PA author of a generation prior to Lose is Henry Shoemaker, who also wrote in the arcadian vein. Good stuff.
