Please use this story as a reality check. One of the reasons heart attacks become fatal is because folks having them tend to be in complete denial.

I had a client out on a creek a couple of months ago. He stepped on a slick rock and slipped down to his butt. After that he started having shoulder and back tightness. He then began having some chest tightness and pain breathing. He was sure that he had pulled a muscle when he slipped. I took him back to the truck and gave him an aspirin and said, "Let's just be safe and get this checked out."

The reality is, this can happen to anyone. Don't be in denial. Don't try to be Superman. Just go get evaluated.

Glad you guys shared this story and glad Lou is going to be around to fish again.
