

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Switzerland

Re: Switzerland

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/7/13 13:07:19

URL:

No. I went all that way to catch STOCKED brown trout, lol. Fingerling stocked.

The trip was for business. I got a couple extra days for pleasure. I took advantage. Because of Switzerland's backward fishing laws, trouty options are very limited on Thursday's, which is when I was available for fishing.

I couldn't have been happier, though. I am, afterall, a small stream guy. The scenery was excellent, the fishing was excellent, it's exactly what I wanted and asked for from the guide. I coulda fished a big lake for pike, which was apparently hot. I coulda went to more lowland areas and fished bigger waters. But THAT is what would be a lot like PA. Northern Switzerland looks a lot like central PA with better food. I wanted to get down in the Alps and fish the highlands.

The stream was very different from PA. Faster. No pools. At all. In PA, you may have a fast riffle, but then there's a pool. There were no pools here, just a straight shoot of fast water, and it was all white. The fish were out of the current in the little corners and such, TIGHT to cover. It wasn't overly grown over, but required very accurate casts and good line handling. It wasn't easy fishing by any means. But it wouldn't have been fun if it were.

The woods were mostly pine, and while I knew what we were heading towards, most of the day you'd just get a peak here and there of the towering mountains. At the top, the forest backed away from the stream as the stream split up. So the view really started right as the fishing ended.