Now that you are a couple days after surgery, I hope the pain is easing up. No fun, but with time, you'll heal up.

none or very few caps in this message... don't feel like moving right arm to hit shift. if i don't keep up on the meds the pain can be mind numbing. i may have even given this description on how this is going on the thread already. i would imagine that this is what it feels like to be shot in the upper arm. i can keep the pain at bay but the result is me not being fit for anything social in anyway shape or form. i enjoy being tuned just as much as the next guy but this is nuts. i go see doc tomorrow am. i've talked to a friend of mine who is also a dr... he is not surprised in the least that i have the level of pain that i have. his advice was to take the meds stay numb till the pain drops. kick back and relax. wow, what a way to go through life. i can't imagine what it would be like to have chronic pain and be on these kinda meds or stronger all the time. i gotta go.... now, where did i put those pills?
