I spent all of yesterday on a brookie stream in the laurel highlands. And after sweating up a bit on the hike in, I found it to rather comfortable after I start fishing. The stream still had a strong flow to it, 4-5 days after the last rainfall - more typical of what you'd expect to find april. And the water temp peaked at a high of 62 degrees in the late afternoon/evening.

The fishing was great - although the heavier flow gave me a lot more holes and pockets to to cover, than I usually have at this time of year
