An update on the original run in this conversation. The rains over the last couple of weeks have dramatically changed things. The outflow is no longer blocked at all with wood debris. All that is left is now along the side. If you look close, you can actually see the hole below. It's been a LONG time since that was possible. There is also another outflow off to the left that has fully cleared out and created a new accessible hole below. This is from last Friday. Streams are dynamic to say the least.
