Good stuff Patrick. I probably won't visit this particular stream again until fall, but I'm anxious to see the changes. I couldn't imagine what it would of been like with all that water.

There's plenty of other streams that I notice change from year to year(or at least after every major blow out). Usually just little things, but occasionally I come across a totally new pool, or maybe come across a favorite pool that has changed. New holes may be created, and others may be ruined, but either way it keeps things fresh and keeps us on our toes.

"I agree with Al on stream improvement. If we just leave well enough alone, this stream will be fine without our help. The fish sure don't need our help. They are fat and healthy for such a small system."

I couldn't agree more with these 4 sentences. Let mother nature take care of our streams, at least the ones we didn't already mess up.
