

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : Trico help.

Re: Trico help.

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/7/17 7:15:30

URL:

Don't know as much about the Breeches in particular. But generally, tricos are very reliable.

Heavy wind or a morning thunderstorm can end things. But that's not the bugs deciding not to perform. The bugs are there, they just get blown away or knocked out of the air prematurely.

They are pretty predictable too. As DFG said, sunny days often fish best. And that's because they fall early, in mass, enough numbers to make it worth it for fish to rise. On overcast or drizzly days, the bugs are still there. But they fall more sporadically later into the morning and sometimes even early afternoon. Sporadic, tiny bugs is often not enough to get many fish to rise steadily.

They mass over riffles, so make sure you're over riffles to see em.