
Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Bass flies

Re: Bass flies

Author: : mike_richardson

Date: : 2013/7/18 8:25:24

URL:

Looks good and will definetly catch fish.

My suggestion would be to put the lead eyes near the eye of the hook. It will keep your crayfish in a defensive position. I don't think the look of eyes in that important on them as much as how they move in the water. I think yours would move with its claws pointed down when you strip it. I tied one in a similar manner and that is what I had found. Might not be that big of deal. I would try one with the weight at the eye and see what you think. Cast them both out. I like the hackle claws but one thing i noticed when i tied one similar to that the hackle is really tough to see in the water, and is why I went with the brown hackle. Ill send you a pic of the hackle claws crayfish i tried.