Life must be miserable when you're always looking at the negative side of things. Ever been to a funeral where they all talk about how awful it is that the person passed, and how terrible it must have been towards the end? Nope. It's about celebrating life and talking about all the wonderful, positive times and the life someone had.

Same thing here. Nobody is going to post up telling the story that is "an old man's misery." Rather, we shed light on the situation and talk about all the positive things that came from this.
