To be clear:

1. I do not claim comp ffer's to in any way be unethical fishermen. Quite the contrary. I do agree all that I've met are among the most courteous, ethical anglers I know.
2. I do not think less of someone who enjoys comps. I'd enjoy it too, as I enjoy pretty much any type of fishing, and any type of sport.
3. I do not claim them to be easy, or require no effort. Competition generally increases the effort anyone puts into any activity. And I fully believe it WILL make you a better angler, or at least better at the type of angling they tend to focus on.

My point was merely, that, as I see it, they do a really nice job of measuring a particular skill set, while ignoring or outright eliminating other skill sets from the competition. Those others are just as necessary to be an all-around good fisherman.

^^And that doesn't mean the competitors don't have those skill sets, merely that the comps don't test them.
