Mike - reflecting on your OP, my catch rates on the Tulpy were not as high this year as certain ones in the 90s, but the trouts were better in size and quality. The hatchery has changed the diet or some process so that the stockies are more beautiful, less banged up and better fighting.

To get over jet lag from a couple of weeks in MT, I hit the Tulpy this week to see what was happening, and at the gauge, all I caught and saw were browns. The big rainbows last month in the same areas were not around. Got a nice little rock bass and 2 sunnies too, and tried to get the couple of carp that were rising to eat a caddis. Kray observed that there are fewer carp and more suckers and that squares with my experience now that I'm thinking about it.
