As was said, people may go to where they're comfortable, but I think that would be really cool.

You'd get to saying, John Doe is the best hatch chaser, Jim Smith is the best pocket water nymph, and Joe Johnson is the best small stream/tight brush fisherman. Now lets see what happens when we set this pack loose in central PA, vs. what happened when we set them loose in western Montana.

If, as an observer, I followed something like this, I'd truly learn a lot, from all of them. You'd get the real, full picture of each location, and how to approach them when setting up a trip. Pick up tips on a much wider variety of techniques, etc. It would help me much more than watching everyone try to do the same thing a little better than everyone else.
