Well, I don't have a boat, so no dice there, I don't have big enough net, not to mention carrying one that big while wading would be interesting to say the least, oh the one time I used boga's was one of the few times I was actually with a friend fishing for pike and I was helping him land it, the fish shook a ton and the boga ripped the lower soft connective stuff in the lip. I stopped using them then. Oh and use and 8wt which is probably to light in some people's opinions.

In my defense, I take fast as pictures, this fish was in and out and back in the water in 2 minutes. The fish didn't take long to revive and swam away no problems no belly up, no laying on the side. I appreciate the comments and concerns and do handle fish the best I can and keep the time out of water to the minimum as well. I can't please everyone.
