I just don't get the tipping part of the guiding business, who's the nut that started that? I guess if a guy's working for a shop then tipping might be ok, but if he's working for himself I think the tip part is built in to the cost. But what do I know.

This whole thing about paying restaurant workers less than minimum wage and counting on the customer to pay them in the form of tips is just wrong. Pay them what they are worth, the whole country's gone mad with this idea of tipping.

I used to have a shop in Philly and every year the trash collectors would come in with their hand out, crap they made more than me, I shoulda had my hand out for giving them trash to pick up so they could keep their jobs.
