Interesting read. I'll venture a guess that it's on many streams...we just haven't found it yet. I saw it in one section of the upper EB a few years back and it was like nothing you've ever seen before. It was about a 1/3 mile long with a 12-18" thick blanket on the bottom. You couldn't see anything but rock snot. Hopefully a phosphorus treatment can control it without harming the rest of the ecosystem.
