Patagonia clothing is second to none. Absolutely, no competition. Aesthetically they are tops. Comfort they are tops. Everything. I get all major outdoor companies 65%+ so I realize its easy for me to say "get this, or get that", but I would pay a pretty penny for patagonia stuff. I wouldnt have every single article of clothing that they make(like I do now), I would use my budget to get a few items. Columbia makes some nice stuff. I dont like it as much as patagonia, but its cheaper so you have that. I cant say i wear anything northface related unless its sub 50 degrees. Mountain hardwear has awesome kayak shorts for boating and wet wading. I dont have a ton of experience with Simms, but I like what I have. I find the patagonia clothing to be comfier and less technical than simms. Simms you would look like a goofball wearing to dinner, or another casual situation. I only have one or two orvis things. A pair of pants and a shirt. I cant comment too much on that brand.

I find I like to get many purposes out of one garment. This is why I back "patagucci". Its awesome to be in all day, and it looks great. Lets me stay out on the water for an extra 45 mins, instead of going home to change out of my jorts before I pick my girlfriend up for dinner. Dont hate on something just cause its awesome :) Your buddy knows its awesome. I know its awesome. Buy a shirt and you will love it to death for the next ten years.
