Yeah, on larger streams, generally not a problem. I've seen ducks put down fish, but it's usually only for a minute or so. They just go right back to rising. I'd assume the effect is even less when they're not rising. The key is for YOU not to spook the fish while shoing the ducks away, lol.

Brookie streams are another story. I rarely have issues with ducks because there usually aren't ducks there. I have had trouble with herons, and even fawns, who just keep moving upstream as you flush them, spooking everything ahead of you. You have to try to get around them. It is a problem. I'd think that ducks would be the same.
