

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Bluefish Charter

Re: Bluefish Charter

Author: : springer1

Date: : 2013/7/27 12:38:49

URL:

Quote:

Yeah...If it's a nice day, it's gonna be packed at the rail. They stuff people onto those boats. On a nice day you can figure to have about 3-4 feet of "personal rail space," if you're lucky. There's no way you could fly fish effectively, and more importantly safely in that situation. I don't think the crew would even let you try

Yes, this is what it's like on a weekend headboat for sure.

On a weekday, it's a lot nicer, and actually the chaos of trying to hang on to big blues going "over and under" people up the side of the boat is really a zany hoot. People don't get upset, its all part of the fun, a big blue feels like it want to snap you rod at the handle.

If you haven't ever done it, it's a lot of fun - best to go on a Friday weekday, check the weather & sea conditions.

IM me if you need a suggestion for a good head-boat. No guarantees, but I know one that's relatively easy to get to, has a 3rd generation skipper that puts us on fish year after year & a crew that doesn't tolerate the "tough crowd" that some boats do.

But even on a weekday, no way would a fly rod be a good idea.