I know that I've set the hook too early and also too late before. Either could be your problem. Also look at your fly. I've tried to fish foam terrestrials that I tied, not realizing that the hook gap was partially closed off by the body of the fly, so I was missing takes. Also did you see the fish that were taking the fly? Could have just been little minnows pecking at it.

I've heard rumors of people being able to mend line without moving the fly, but I've never been able to. I just try to time my mend so I'm not making my fly twitch right on top of where I think there's a fish.
