Even though I know nothing about Donegal, I kinda agree with NickR. Earlier this year I fished one of the fingerling stocked streams and got skunked, but later the same day I fished one of the branches to the stream farther up in the watershed and caught one of the fingerlings(fin clip and all). Fish move.

In the fall and winter I got to fish another one of the experimental streams, and even though I fished the stream not all that long after it was stocked, the fish still spread out fairly quickly. Got quite a few above the FFO waters. I've been itching to get back there and check it out again to see how they're doing but I just haven't gotten around to doing it yet. It'll be interesting to hear how the fingerlings are doing in the other streams(assuming the PFBC is going to shock them as well).
