

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Echo Rods for 2014

Re: Echo Rods for 2014

Author: : SBecker

Date: : 2013/7/29 10:23:34

URL:

Quote:

kpitts32 wrote:

I never understood why people who had a 9ft rod felt it necessary to buy a 10ft rod for nymphing. Same thing goes for the people using spey rods these days. Just because your rods 13 feet long does not mean you will have better "line control". Nice drift, im sure that will catch you fish. The fish are at your feet, your rods 9 foot long, having trouble? Add more tippet or quit casting to the other side of the bank.

Glad your getting your rod back though!

Your response clearly shows your ignorance on the subject. I am not trying to being mean, but you obviously do not understand the concepts and the benefits of a longer rod. Add tippet? Sure I mean my 23ft leader probably needs more tippet. Don't fish the other side of the bank? Lol why? Because it is harder to get to? Yea I do not want to catch fish over there. The fish are not right at your feet all the times. Actually, most of the times they aren't.

Longer rods do not automatically give you better line control, but once you begin to understand rod angles, it greatly helps. I do not know anything about spey rods, so I can not comment. Just as you clearly do not know anything about longer rods used for nymphing. Maybe you shouldn't try to bash a rod, because you do not understand the concepts it is used for?