I think some of the folks that bowfish give them to people to consume... I have friends who own a horse farm near me and they have a fairly large group of Mexicans that work the farm. Well the local creek flooded and a bunch of carp got trapped in puddles along the bank and were going to die. The Mexicans came and picked up all the carp and took them home to eat. People actually eat them... I will pass on that.

Although would be funny to invite some fishing friends over for dinner and cook some fish... would be funny to tell them they are eating striped bass or sea bass and then when they are done eating show them the picture of the carp in it's slimy glory laying on a mud covered bank and tell them that they are actually eating carp.
