

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : PA Prodigal son returning for fly fishing trip

Re: PA Prodigal son returning for fly fishing trip

Author: : lv2nymph

Date: : 2013/7/30 19:58:16

URL:

First and foremost thanks for your service, on to the matter at hand. Have you ever tried a two weight rod before? This might not happen to everybody but I found that it's tough to keep them on the hook in those tight little streams too much wiggle I think, just something too consider that's all. Length of rod does come down to personal preference but a seven foot / seven and a half three or four weight is a very good choice. You could probably get away with an 8'-6" on small streams depending on how open it is. Personally I'd opt for a little shorter than you have listed. For flies and brookies there is not much need to match the hatch as they are very opportunistic feeders and most generic dry flies will turn their heads, same with nymphs if you so choose. If I was packing two of what you have listed it would be the 3 and six weight that way you could cover several different size streams if you run into a larger one.