Mr. M,

There ya go. Inexpensive way to figure out if floating is for you. You can deflate the pontoons in 30 seconds. Roll em up, put them on a rubbermaid container, remove the oars and pull 2 pins on the frame. You will get efficient at it and learn to loathe it. In 1-2 trips, you will figure out how to tie it to the roof or find a buddy with a pick up to fish with. Picture 8 hours of fishing & rowing The last thing you want to do is f around with a boat in the dark. Good way to lose parts. Before getting a trailer, I'd go to the Delaware and float for 3-4 days. Every evening, deflate and take it apart. Every morning, blow up and assemble. Now, the boat just stays put together from the first week of April until October. I then winterize and put in the basement. You'll figure out a system that will work for you.
