

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : PA Prodigal son returning for fly fishing trip

Re: PA Prodigal son returning for fly fishing trip

Author: : lv2nymph

Date: : 2013/7/31 5:27:28

URL:

Quote:

Six-Gun wrote:

I may bite the bullet and go for an even shorter rod than what you recommended, purely because it will have to do in the VERY crowded creek waters in southwestern Utah when I return to my normal fishing areas. All that said, what flies would you pack if you were after some of the Browns in the mixed-species creeks in that area? In particular, what nymphs would you run?

Ok, I wasn't sure how much if any small stream fishing you've played with. I see you are serious with thinking smaller than seven feet. I have a 5'-8" three piece four weight that I use for just the places in which you describe. I didn't want to suggest that simply because a rod like that is such a specific type of rod. Some nymphs to have in fall: ant (wet), fox squirrel nymph, mink bead head, hares ear/ hr flymph, some caddis tan/green, pheasant tail, not sure if any of these will be where you'll be at but have a couple of nymphs for white fly ( just in case ) maybe even some for slate drakes, frenchie, smaller muddlers. Again for brookies you don't need this kind of assortment but for mixed species waters it couldn't hurt.