

Subject: : Beginner Forum

Topic: : Dry Fly Fishing

Re: Dry Fly Fishing

Author: : Stagger_Lee

Date: : 2013/8/1 6:04:02

URL:

Quote:

boychick wrote:

Awesome man, very happy for you.

Thanks and more imptly thanks for the advice (you and the others). Per leaving the nymphs @ home ... I'll leave'em in the car just in case real frustration sets in. 😊

Quote:

VN wrote:

I am shedding a joyful tear here Andrew

Lol .. funny thing is my wife just doesn't get it so I need ur "tears of joy" 😊. When I walked in the door last night I was rambling on abt my success that evening and she basically said "I dont get it? It isn't like you've never caught fish b4". Good women but just doesn't get it.

Quote:

WildTigerTrout wrote:

Congrats, great job. Did you watch and observe the water for a period of time before you started fishing? IMO that's important. Remember that little talk we had last Saturday? Again it's great to hear your skills are improving. Keep at it.

Yes sir! Took my time getting to the spot (observing where I thought they would be holding) as I could've just worked my way up stream. Was determined to fish dry only, just work on some of the different things discussed here (Have a few more questions but I'll post'em later) Only place I saw consistent rising was in the kiddie pool.

Even took my time watching them rise there tho I don't know what they were rising to. FYI ... look @ my post, #10 in this thread ... I remember.