Dave, the OP said it was a Clarion trib.

For the purposes of my "analysis", that does mean Allegheny drainage. I have generally believed that overall coloration, meaning deepness of reds, greens, blues, yellows, etc., is mostly environmental and diet, rather than genetic. I could be wrong on that. It's also variable by time of year, both due to diet and hormones.

It is true that he said that and I did see it. But I just have this gut feeling that it was actually a trib of a trib of the Clarion. 😊

When he said forest, I just had a feeling he meant Cook Forest instead of ANF and that was my old stomping grounds.

As far as the rest of that goes, I wasn't arguing with you. In fact, have not said anything that disagrees with what you said. It all sounded reasonable to me.

When I said I hadn't noticed, it was because I hadn't looked all that close.
