Nice read Chaz.

The way I understand it, many old power plants were grandfathered in the clean air act because they were "scheduled" for closure anyway, but they are all still in operation because it is cheaper to keep those going than to build new ones.

Just sayin. It's all about economics.

I personally would have no problem paying more for my electricity if it meant closing those down. I've already reduced my consumption considerably.

I know the area that this guy is talking about, and it is as bad as it sounds.
