Wild or stocked?

I was digging through some of my photos from earlier this year and came across this photo of a brownie that I caught and remember taking a second look and wondering before the release. What do you think - is it stocked, wild or maybe a holdover fish? I can see certain attributes of both. I wish the photo was of better quality (not so grainy) and I know there are parts of the fish that you really can't see very well. I also realize this question has been asked many times on the forum, just looking for some feedback. Thanks.
