Chaz, I don't consider a spot "count" as an indicator. I've seen both very few and a whole lot of spots in all of the above. It's more how they are arranged.

In regards to your fish, yeah, the patterns on that go low, and encroach upon the belly. Sharp tail markings in an arc as well. I would have guessed that fish NOT to have come from the Allegheny drainage. I'm curious. When you say "same stream", do you mean same as the OP, as in Clarion trib? Or do you mean same as your 6 line fish, or same as my 3 spot fish (i.e. Susquehanna or D. systems). I'm not saying the method is foolproof, but I'd be honestly surprised if that one came from the Allegheny drainage. Doesn't even look like a tweener.
