uhhm, why exactly do you guys object to DCNR monitoring the pollution levels in the stream, any stream? Seems to me the PCB levels in the fish would be a pretty decent indicator of the overall health of the watershed? Imagine this has more to do with than just the trouts...

Thanks for bringing some logic to the conversation.

Edit: To clarify, this was not directed at afishinado or Troutbert. I am shocked at the others suggesting additional followup testing to a Superfund site is not needed because "the fishing is good".
