One thing to keep in mind with topics that get discussed a lot on here and have come to bore the regulars is there are constantly new anglers coming on board with us and have yet to talk about a certain subject with this many different flyfishers in the detail it gets to here to get bored with it.

This is a good point and worth remembering. When I was new on this forum I too started some threads that I thought were interesting and original but, in fact, were old hat. Truth be told, the overwhelming preponderance of material on this forum (like most fly fishing magazines etc) is recycled stuff. Genuinely new ideas or truly original topics are rare.

Sometimes if a well intentioned new forum member starts a thread on an old topic with which we're tired of (or a stream we have discussed at great length recently) a polite and gentle suggestion to try the Advanced Search.....or better yet a courteous link to the last thread on the topic, can be helpful.

But we don't want to discourage enthusiastic new members of our forum (esp if they're beginning FFers) from starting new threads.
