Reading this makes me grin. I know I have had several similar experiences with big fish. The second after they get away is probably the single worst moment of your life up until that point--just for that instant. After that, I would always laugh a little to myself, and tip my cap to the victor. It does add a little bit of tense excitement everytime you approach that stretch of water in the future. I agree with the heavier tippet. It was a game changer for me to switch from 5x to 4x when nymphing for "the big one" everytime I located them on Spring. Now that you have seen it up close, how big is it?
