Mountainbrookie, if you kill a doe from about late Oct on, odds are VERY GOOD that you actually killed 3 deer, and possibly 4 as a doe will sometimes have 3 fawns. This should be taken into consideration. I don't know where you get your information from.

I still stick to what I said, because it's true. How do you figure a doe that is bred in Oct/Nov isn't going to have fawns the following Spring? Please explain why you think differently.

Why? Because if a doe is KILLED (the keyword in his statement) in the fall, be it October/November or December, it is definitely not going to have 1,2 or 3 fawns the following spring no matter how pregnant it was.

When it comes to the reasons for our various Pa hunting season, Mountainbrookie sure seems to have the bead on it here IMO.
