So, this morning I was driving out to fish one of my favorite WT streams. Had to go east along route 286 through Saltsburg. As I'm crossing the bridge over the conemaugh river, I saw clouds of small whitish colored flies dancing up and down in the air. So, I stopped to check it out.

It didn't take me long to catch some of the flies, and found out that they were trikes - although they were smaller than the ones I fish on limestone streams. These guys were definitely a size #24 - #26.

The water was in great shape - low and lear

And I hung around awhile to see if anything started rising when the spinners finally fell - but saw no surface activity at all.

The conemaugh is a warm water stream in that area and I would have thought that at least some bass or fallfish would have come up for the hatch.

Just wondering if anyone else has seen this hatch on that stream, and maybe even fished it
