For the adults to consent is one thing. Yeah, they make their own decisions. But to impose the gag on the kids is another. Who's responsible for a child's actions? The parents.

Exactly.

But as a parent myself I know for a fact kids are going to say what they want, when they want and parents are not always going to be around.

Absolutely. But knowing that, would you sign such an agreement? I wouldn't.

So if they start complaining about Range Resources -- how they are the ones who made their head hurt -- in school and word gets out, Range Resources will go after the kids?

No, but they could go after the parents. You know, the ones that signed the agreement. Please see your first question.

Get real,

I am quite real.

[/quote]Range Resources. You won't be able to gag a kid and it was sleazy of that company to drag them into it... slimier than frack fluid.[/quote]

Of course it was sleazy for the lawyer to insist on the gag order covering the entire family. But it wasn't a secret at the time of signing and the parents still signed. Who's fault is that?

I still think we are only hearing one side and there might be more to it.
