After I concluded my business in Newark DE it was too late to fish White Clay. But I did drive to the bridge on London Tract Road to get a look see. There were very large trout on both sides of the bridge which amazed me. Not suckers unless suckers come out of the water. Duh. Plus suckers don't dart and wiggle like trout. I took the water temp from the bridge with my infra red and it was 73 degrees. To say the least i was more than surprised. But given that Van Cleaver's June report was the last mention of WC maybe its a case of lack of pressure.
